Patient care

Students are taught that dignity is a top priority in caring for people and should treat you with respect. If you have any concerns regarding students and your care, please speak to the nurse in charge, the senior doctor or Professor McEwan.

Consent for examination under anaesthetic

Although students begin to learn some skills in examining patients using dummies or models they must also examine real patients. If there is the possibility of this taking place during an examination under anaesthetic (for example, a vaginal or rectal examination) your permission will be sought. Such an examination is not permitted under any other circumstances. You will be approached by the student who will explain what is involved and, if you agree, you will be asked to sign a form naming the student receiving your permission. There is no pressure upon you to agree; you can refuse and this will not affect your care in any way.

The students and their teachers are grateful for your contribution to their learning.

Contact details

Professor Jean McEwan
UCLH Site Sub Dean and UCLH Director of Undergraduate Medical Education

Tel: 0845 155 5000 ext 78110
Address: 4th Floor East, 250 Euston Road, London, NW1 2PG

Where can I get more information?

On UCL Hospitals' website: www.uclh.nhs.uk/Patients/Inpatients+guide/

If you would like this leaflet in another format - for example, large print or audio - or in translation, please ring our PALS office on 020 3447 3042 (email: www.pals@uclh.nhs.uk).
We will do our best to meet your needs.

Publication date: Dec 2011
Date last reviewed: Dec 2011
Date next review due: Dec 2013
Leaflet code: UCL/MEDSCH/1

© University College London Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust
Introduction
Almost 2000 students study medicine at the UCL Medical School. Every day around 200 of them are at UCL Hospitals, talking to and examining patients, observing in the operating theatre and X-ray suites and learning by apprenticeship.

It is very likely that you will meet these young people whose teachers are the doctors, nurses and other professionals who care for you.

How do students learn?
Students learn best by interviewing and talking to you as part of our everyday work at UCL Hospitals.

Learning and teaching are the tools that enable us to achieve excellence.

By meeting with you they are learning much about interacting with people, and gaining knowledge not easily obtained from textbooks.

Students will meet patients on wards and in the outpatient departments. They may also be present as observers when you have tests, or procedures or operations.

These activities enrich and underpin all the caring, promotion of good health, and research that we do at UCL Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust.

How can I identify students?
The students have ID badges and these should be visible to you. Students should always be introduced to you, or introduce themselves, and ask your permission for any interaction on the wards or in the clinics.

What if I don’t want students present?
You are always free to refuse to have medical students present. This will not affect your care in any way.

It is also your right if you are a woman approached by a male student who asks to examine you, to request the presence of a female nurse, doctor or student as a chaperone.

Confidentiality
Students are bound by the professional duty of confidentiality. They are expected to pass relevant personal information that you give them to the responsible doctor, but no further. If you want to talk to a student in confidence you are welcome to do so but please understand that the student is normally expected to pass on information relevant to your treatment.